The Life Of The Bee

The lifespan of a bee can be several weeks, months, or years. The species, caste and gender of a bee influence how long he or she will live for. Queen honeybees in the Apis genus can survive for years. Apis mellifera (European honeybee) queens have a lifespan between two and five years on average.

Life Cycle of a Bee Sentence Writing Activity (teacher made)

The life cycle of a honey bee is made up of four important stages. These four stages are the egg, the larva, the pupae and the adult stage. The colonies of honey bees are perennial ones and the only exceptions to this rule are paper wasp and the bumble bee colonies. Every bee colony comprises three main types or castes of bees.

Unlike a bumble bee colony or a paper wasp colony, the life of a honey bee colony is perennial. The three types of honey bees in a hive are: queens (egg-producers), workers (non-reproducing females), and drones (males whose main duty is to find and mate with a queen). Honey bee larvae hatch from eggs in three to four days.
